While this is particularly worrisome in the last years of his career, it's a problem as early as the 1930's, when Dr. King considers Poirot's moustache "suspiciously black" in Appointment with Death, and in Hercule Poirot's Christmas he mourns that "However expensive the preparation... to restore the natural colour does somewhat impoverish the quality of the hair." The older he gets, the more obvious it is that he dyes his moustache, and this deeply embarrasses him.
