Responsive web design (or RWD) might be compared to liquid/fluid layouts but with more functionality. CSS includes a new at-rule written like @media. This is often used to separate CSS stylesheets for different mediums like screen and print.

The Ultimate Guide to Responsive Web Design

A grid system, like those used in magazine layouts, is critical to responsive web design. In order for the layout to be flexible, the measurements must be a percentage, not pixels. This means that a website with a 50% width will always take up half of the screen the website is viewed on, regardless of its size.
