Every sound that we make, for example “th,” is made from even smaller sounds which we will call states. The states can be put together to form different sounds. An HMM decides if the uttered sound was a “th” by going through a series of states and then checking if the states from beginning to end make up the sound “th” [1].

We examine how our scholars and practitioners help shape and communicate the world of celebrity. On March 20, musician Josh Groban hosted one of the first Billboard Live At-Home music sessions. Dressed casually in an Interlochen Center of the Arts baseball cap and sitting up against a gray wall, he was a little out of focus, a little off-center, and initially wondered aloud if
